A financial system is considered sustainable if it financially enables and accelerates the transition of the economy and society towards sustainability. Over the course of the last few months, the Swiss Federal Office for the Environment (FOEN) worked together with experts from the financial sector, science, non-governmental organisations and government to produce a comprehensive report that identifies the most important concrete measures for creating a (more) sustainable financial system in Switzerland. The measures outlined in the report will help create a Swiss Financial System that supports the transition to a green and inclusive economy. We would like to invite you as our guest for the official launch of this report held as a side event to the Swiss Sustainable Finance Members' Assembly.
